- Public Policy: Danielle Patterson, Government Relations Director at American Heart Association

"Within their respective fields, our 2014 Breakthrough Women are truly breaking through barriers and shattering the glass ceiling," said Nadine Bonds, president of the NCBW, Indianapolis Chapter. "These outstanding leaders have honed their skills through hard work, discipline, determination, faith and perseverance. They have contributed to substantial progress within the Indianapolis community through their extraordinary accomplishments."

Since 1988, the Coalition has recognized over 100 women in the Indianapolis community who have broken through barriers, achieved a level of accomplishment above and beyond what is considered typical in her profession, and contributed to substantial progress in her community. An organization of progressive women of African descent, NCBW advocates on behalf of women of color through strategic alliances that promote its national agenda of leadership development and gender equity in the areas of health, education and economic empowerment.
